Since the outbreak of the war the commission has certified for appointment, in the field and departmental services, between 129,000 and 125,000

Independent bureaus have employed many hundred clerks, typists and stenographers. The food administration now uses a force of nearly one thousand. The War Trade Board employs more than 700; the fuel administration now employs about 100 clerks and the Council of National Defense and the Red Cross have engaged approximately 1,400 persons who are divided about equally between the two O'Brten. ally to the large force of the Govern-ment Printing Office and it is esti-mated that additions to the other departments will run the total number of new government workers to 20,000.

The housing of its enlarged bureaus has been a problem for the government since the declaration of war. Dozens of rented buildings are being used. Within the past few days the government found it necessary to lease almost the whole of an eight-story office building for the War Trade Board. The old Department of Justice building was quite inadequate.

In its search for room the government has found it advisable to rent even apartment houses. An apartment house at 15th and M streets was reneated. nouse at 15th and M streets was reneal in its entirety before completion and the cantonment division of the Quartermaster Corps moved in as the plastered walls were drying.

Erected in Rush.

Rapidly expanding here.

Rapidly expanding bureaus and commissions have made necessary the construction of several buildings for the accommodation of government offices. These buildings have been hurriedly but substantially constructed on government land near Potomac Park. The buildings erected are not unlike those buildings erected are not unlike those at the National Army cantonments. The Council of National Defense, the food administration and the American Red ministration and the American Red cross (an overflow section of the latter) have recently moved into these war-time structures. It is still necessary, however, to rent buildings in war-time structures. It is still necessary, however, to rent buildings in various sections of Washington and the bureaus of some departments may be found in widely scattered areas.

In addition to the thousands of paid government employes who have recently come to Washington, the city is peopled now with hundreds of reserve officers, business men who have volunteered to work for $1 a year, contractors and the families of those who have been called to Washington for the duration of the war.

While the number of appointments is far behind the number of certifications, the figures indicate the preparations made for the extraordinary demands of war. Appointments are being made daily from this list and the civil service commission continues to hold examinations. Civil service certifications for the service in and out of Washington embrace all classes from watchmen and messengers to expert accountants and chemists.

The War Department leads in the additions to clerical forces since the beginning of the war. Since April 6 the War Department has added approximately 5,200 names to its roster of Washington employes.

The clerical force of the Navy Department is today substantially double that at the beginning of the war. About 2,500 employes have been added, this number including around 800 "yeowomen" who have enlisted in the Navy and are now assigned to cierical dutles.
